

Sale of art objects and precious decorative items

On behalf of our clients

A strategy for selling items

Even after an accident or a retrieval after theft, all art objects and precious pieces retain a significant market value.

Once the insured party has ceded possession of their assets, we can arrange their sale on behalf of the insurance company. In this way, the cost of the incident can be considerably reduced.

A coordinated approach

Selling items on behalf of our clients is generally part of a comprehensive and coordinated services we offer: after an incident, the damaged or retrieved assets may be restored through our repair service. If the insured party does not wish to have their item returned or has chosen full compensation, the fine art team and the incident specialists take care of arranging the sale through our networks of auctioneers, antique dealers and gallery owners. The fine art expert negotiates and sets the best negotiation price on behalf of our client.

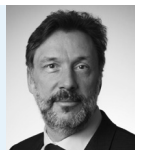

For example, our recent sales include an XVIII-century commode damaged in an accident, jewellery, Gallé vases restored after an accident and diamonds recut by a traditional jeweller before being resold.

Our services can cover transport logistics, the insurance and the sale, as well as restoration where necessary. They are carried out for set fees, indicated in a quotation prior to service delivery.
